Hello!
Welcome to my third mini-folio/comic! Perhaps I had better start with an introduction.

I'm Pat Kelley, a twenty-three year old guy with a BS in biology and a USArmy reserve commission as a 2LT in the military police corps. I also do a lot of drawing. I've only been kicking around in comics for the last year or so, starting with some touch up work for Antarctic Press. I have a few stories of "Watering Hole" published in "Furrlough" with episode four on the way and hopefully more to follow. (...for those concerned they are issues 13,14,and 16). As far as the rest of my work, I tend to jump around quite a bit. Subject matter is usually anything that strikes me as "cool!"

I try to work my drawings to convey motion and action, and to that end I tend to draw on influences who convey this well. One of my earlier influences was Bret Blevins. While not as polished as a lot of artists, he conveys much better than many a feeling of motion and action. I thought that as a base this would be good in storytelling.

Anyway, I hope you enjoy this folio - it includes seven pages of a never-published exercise in character development by yours truly, as well as numerous other sketches and ideas. Bon Appetit!

This is a design I thought of after seeing a rim-driven saw in an architect friend's magazine. I later learned something like this is already in development.
